Warm, with probable showers today. The maximum temperature yesterday was 80.6 and the minimum 73.2, the figures for the corresponding day last year being 76.1 and 66.4.

STRIKERS TO CONFER FOR ADJUSTMENT HERE TODAY

14 Representatives To Meet Masters At Local Hotel At 2 O'clock

EXCUSE FRAMED

Contractors Seeking To Divide Burden With Building Owners

Representatives of the masters and the striking carpenters and masons will hold a conference at the Yih Ping Shang Hotel this afternoon at 2 o'clock to adjust the strike situation in Shanghai. The demands of the strikers will be formally considered and in turn the representatives of the employers will offer an increase. Admission will be by tickets only.

Circulars to this effect were sent the 20,000-odd workmen involved in the strike, asking each clique to elect its representative to the conference. Fourteen were accordingly elected, it is understood. Directors of the Contractors' Guild were the authors of the message, in which they expressed their difficulty in meeting the terms of the strikers in view of the approaching settlement day on the Dragon Boat Festival.

CONTRACTOR'S POSITION

They say they are quite willing to increase their employes' wages provided they are able to secure an increase in the contract prices from their owners.

Co-incident with the increase in the price of rice which mainly caused the general walkout for higher wages, the price of firewood has also gone up 20 percent. Rice stalk, used by the Chinese families for kindling purposes jumped from 50 cents to 80 cents during the last week.

The Kiangsu Provincial Assembly has adopted a resolution forbidding the exportation of rice to neighboring provinces. The Acting Defense Commissioner, General Ho Fungling, yesterday instructed Magistrate Shen Pao-chang to confer with the masters and effect an immediate settlement of the strike in Shanghai and Pootung.

ASK COUNCIL'S AID

In a letter to the Municipal Council, the Shanghai Federated Street Unions yesterday urged it to adopt rigid measures to prevent the exportation of rice in view of the critical situation caused by the rise in price. It suggested that the Council invite informers to disclose smuggling cases and legalise the confiscation of rice seized while being smuggled to other countries.

Three hundred laborers engaged in one of the leading lumber yards are scheduled to go out this morning, it is understood.

British Drug Bill On Second Reading

(Reuter's Service)

London, June 11.—The Dangerous Drugs Bill, prohibiting the importation and exportation of dangerous drugs except by licence, was read a second time in the House of Commons today.

Mr. J. L. Baird, Under-Secretary of State, Home Office, stated that one of the reasons for the Government's anxiety to have the powers in the Bill was that the British representatives in China and Japan respectively had repeatedly referred to the disastrous effect of the morphia and cocaine traffic with China.

He said that the Government hoped to be able to get our Japanese Allies and our Chinese friends to deal with this trade.

England Rejects Railways Control

(Reuter's Service)

London, June 11.—The Daily Express states that the Cabinet has adopted a transport scheme whereby the organisation of transport is directed by the State although actual undertakings remain under private ownership.

The Ministry of Transport becomes permanent with considerable power of control over transport services. The scheme for the nationalisation of railways has been rejected.

The Times states that under the Government transport scheme the railways will be concentrated in the hands of companies. Ports will be provided with railway facilities irrespective of the interests of individual companies.

U.S. Aero Mail Service Has Second Anniversary; Is Crowned With Success

Daily New York-Chicago And Washington-New York Routes Do Big Work—Trans-Continental Service Shortly To Be Inaugurated

Washington, D. C., May 20.—The air mail service has been operated with phenomenal success during two years, the second anniversary of its inauguration being May 15. The routes in operation at the close of the second year extend from Washington to New York, from New York to Chicago, and from Chicago to Omaha.

Within a few weeks the service will be extended to St. Louis. A survey and inspection of the proposed route through to San Francisco is now being made, and service through from New York to the Pacific Coast will be inaugurated as soon after the beginning of the fiscal year as the necessary equipment and landing fields can be perfected.

It has been anticipated that the route between Washington and New York would have to be abolished in consequence of Congressional action in not providing for the air mail service. This, however, will not be the case. The New York-Washington service will be continued along with the establishment and operation of the New York-San Francisco service.

PROBLEMS SOLVED

The manner in which the problems involved in the utilisation of airplanes for carrying mail have been solved and the complete efficiency developed in the operation of the air mail service has put an end to skepticism as to the practicability of air transportation and greatly advanced the commercial utility of aviation.

When the air mail service was established May 15, 1918, there was a division of opinion among authorities in aeronautics as to whether flying would be possible under adverse weather conditions. The Post Office Department has demonstrated by its daily service that the mail can be carried by airplane under all weather conditions, winter and summer.

During the second year the postal airplanes covered a total mileage of 498,664 transporting a total of 538,734 pounds of mail. The average percentage of performance, including flights made under the most adverse conditions, was 87 percent for the entire year.

90 PERCENT EFFICIENCY

The New York-Washington route operated daily with an efficiency of better than 90 percent. Its success justifies the extension of the service from New York across the Allegheny mountains to Cleveland and Chicago, and the success of that undertaking resulted in Congress authorising a daily round trip air mail service during the coming fiscal year across the continent from New York to San Francisco.

During the past winter, which has been the most severe in some time, the Air Mail operated successfully, advancing the mail practically all of the time from 12 to 16 hours over the train time, had the train arrived on schedule time. However, the train schedules between New York and Chicago were notoriously bad during the past winter months.

Economically, the Air Mail has been justified as signally as it has been justified as a flying proposition. Not only has the cost of operations kept down far below what the original friends and supporters of the Air Mail had anticipated but, by rea-

Lloyd George Says Alliance With Japan Does Not Infringe On China

(Reuter's Service)

London, June 10.—In the House of Commons today, replying to Lieut.-Colonel L'Estrange Malone (Liberal), Mr. Lloyd George denied tha the Anglo-Japanese agreements of 1905 and 1911 had infringed upon the integrity of Chinese territory without the consent of the Chinese Government. He pointed out that China had not yet ratified the Austrian Peace Treaty, of which the Covenant of the League of Nations was a part.

With regard to Lieut.Colonel Malone's suggestion that before any further treaties or agreements were made they should be referred to the League of Nations, Mr. Lloyd George emphasised that the Government had every intention of strictly adhering to Article 18 of the Convenant of the League.

Note—Article 18 of the Covenant of the League of Nations says: "Every treaty or international engagement, entered into hereafter by any Member of the League, shall be forthwith registered wtih the Secretariat and shall as soon as possible be published by it. No such treaty of international engagement shall be binding until so registered."

U. S. ALWAYS IS READY TO HELP CHINA, SAYS MR. CRANE

New Minister Presents His Credentials At Capital City

PRESIDENT IN REPLY

Hsu Assures American Of Lasting Friendship Between Nations

Peking, June 12.—The Honorable Charles R. Crane, America's new Minister to China presented his credentials to President Hsu Shih-chang at 9 o'clock this morning. Mr. Crane set out from the American Legation, driving in the President's state carriage accompanied by Master of Ceremonies Wang Kai-wen.

Dr. Charles D. Tenney, Counsellor of the American Legation, and Admiral Tsai Ting-kan, Assistant Master of Ceremonies, followed in a second carriage of state, whilst the entire staff of the American Legation, Colonel Gulick and Commander Hoyt of the Legation Guard, and Colonel Morrow and Major Pope, representing the 15th U. S. Infantry, followed in six motor-cars.

They were preceded by a detachment of mounted guard attached to the President's palace and the Minister's coach was flanked by four outriders.

Upon their arrival at the Hsin Hua-men, or South Gate to the President's palace, the entire party boarded motor-cars and proceeded to the Ta Li T'ang, or Grand Ceromonial Hall, where all ministers of Foreign Powers are received when they present their credentials.

ARRIVE IN HALL

After a brief wait in the anti-room Mr. Crane and his staff were ushered into the hall, where President Hsu stood waiting to receive them, supported by his personal aides and the members of the Board of Generals, who stood in a semi-circle on both sides of the hall.

Before handing his credentials to the President Mr. Crane made a brief address in which he laid especial stress upon the friendly relations that had always existed between the Chinese and American peoples. These remarks were translated into Chinese by Mr. Willys R. Peck, acting Chinese secretary to the American Legation; and Mr. Crane thereupon submitted to the President his letter of credence and the letter of recall of Dr. Paul S. Reinsch, the late American Minister.

PRESIDENT REPLIES

President Hsu replied to Mr. Crane in a brief speech in which he welcomed the new American Minister to China and expressed his gratification over the ever-strengthening bonds of friendship between the peoples of China and the United States. The President's remarks were translated into English by Dr. Philip K. C. Tyau, Councillor of the Waichiaopu.

President Hsu withdrew from the Ceremonial Hall at about 9:30 and the American Minister and his staff set out for the Legation a few minutes later having first partaken

The soldiers looted the compound of the mission's college and shot and killed the clergyman during their raid. They are looting the city generally since their chief took refuge there.

General Wang Chuan-yuan, Inspector-General of Hupeh and Hunan, has warned Chang Ching-yao, the fleeing Governor, that he would be held personally responsible for all losses sustained by Americans in his province.

Rumanian Crown Prince Arrives In Shanghai; Is Seeking Real Democracy

Future King Declares He Is Fed Up With Pomp Of Officialdom

PRINCE CAROL OF RUMANIA

When the P. and O. liner Madras docked at Hongkew jetty yesterday afternoon a tall, slim chap, adorned in an unimposing blue suit and of mein far from regal leaned over the rail of the cabin deck and watched with interest the coolies making fast the lines.

It was His Royal Highness, Carol, Crown Prince of Rumania.

He is on his way to Japan, after an extensive journey through other lands, and will visit the United States before returning to Bucharest.

A ROMANTIC PHASE

A romantic phase attaches to the trip although the Prince, who speaks excellent English, refused to discuss the matter. It is known that the voyage was planned by the King with a view to aiding the royal offspring in forgetting his attachment to a family that is of inferior rank to that of his own.

The Prince is a commonplace figure; a tall youth of excellent physique, despite his slenderness; and apparently possessed of the most democratic of tastes.

"I want to get in touch with the real people," said he yesterday. "I'm thoroughly fed up on officialdom."

Aside from this spontaneous expression his remarks were few. He strolled about the deck of the ship quietly and without any assumption of superiority and seemed to enjoy himself to the utmost in watching the operations of unloading cargo, the futile struggles of passengers who sought to get luggage ashore and the singsong chants of the coolies at their work about the jetty.

GOES TO NANKING

In the meantime the ten members of his suite were engaged in a frantic scramble to untangle the plans for the Prince's two or three day stay in China. Finally it was arranged that he should leave Shanghai at 11 o'clock last evening for Nanking, in order that he might see a real Chinese city rather than an International Settlement, and return to the ship this afternoon.

Mr. K. Yamasaki, consul general for Japan, and Mr. Kiyoshi Uchiyama, vice-consul, were among those who welcomed the Prince to the Orient. They invited him to the consulate general but he declined the honor on the ground that his stay here is to be brief and he is well situated aboard the ship which is to bear him as far as Kobe.

Mr. N. T. Yang, secretary of the Bureau of Foreign Affairs, was at the jetty to greet the Prince on behalf of the Chinese government. The Shanghai Municipal Police detective department was represented by Acting Chief T. P. Givens and Detective Sergeant J. J. Kilkenny, who provided an escort for the royal visitor from the ship to the railway station.

Leaving Rumania on February 20, the Prince and his suite visited Egypt, Ceylon, India, and Hongkong before coming to Shanghai. They will go from here to Japan and thence through the United States home.

In the party of the Crown Prince are Lt. Col. Condiesio, Lt. Col. Arion, Mr. Djonara, secretary to the Prince, Captain H. Lazar, Mr. Costesio, police interpreter, Mr. Posmantier, official cinema operator, General Gowanescul, Minister Filidor and two servants.

MONTH IN JAPAN

The Prince expects to spend fully a month in Japan. He was asked about the reports that he expects to negotiate a loan there for the aid of Rumania's reconstruction but refused to discuss the matter. His greatest interest here seemed to be in local conditions wholly disassociated with world affairs.

That the future King of Rumania is thoroughly human was indicated by an incident aboard the ship last evening. A Chinese money changer, with the annoying persistency of his ilk, blocked the Prince in a gangway. He refused to be dismissed and the smile that had at first overspread the royal countenance soon changed to a frown of annovance.

The money changer stood firm.

The Crown Prince appeared for a moment undecided as to what he should do. Then he did just what almost any commoner would do; he cried:

"Get out of my way before I tread on your toes."

G.O.P. LEADERS NOW WONDERING OVER PLATFORM

Possible Effect Of Fiats At Convention Studied By Republicans

(Reuter's Service)

Chicago, June 12.—The Republican leaders are already speculating on the effect of their stand on the League of Nations question and on the chances of success for the party in the November elections.

It is pointed out that the Republicans favor an international association, providing for an instant general international conference whenever war threatens. The Republicans believe that the United States can participate in such a conference without compromising its national independence or involving it in a multitude of quarrels, the merits of which it is unable to judge.

Editor's Note.—Through an unavoidable accident, the Reuter despatch relating to the declaration of principles enunciated at the Republican national convention, was omitted from the columns of THE CHINA PRESS yesterday morning.

Accordingly it is appended herewith:

Chicago, June 10.—The Republican Convention today adopted its platform. The document condemns the action of the President in asking Congress to empower the acceptance of the Armenian mandate; which, it says, would throw America into the maelstrom of European quarrels, would necessitate sending 59,000 Americans to police

DR. WU ALLOTS TLS. 850,000 FOR NEW UNIVERSITY

Move Is Endorsed By The Other Three Southern Leaders In Shanghai

The sum of Tls. 850,000, now deposited with banks in Hongkong, will be alloted by Dr. Wu Ting-fang to the initial expenses of the establishment of the Southwestern University, according to a letter addressed yesterday to the directors of the proposed institution signed by Dr. C. C. Wu, the son of the veteran statesman.

The message, after expressing regret over the litigation that took place in the Shanghai and Hongkong courts in connection with the trust fund, pointed out that the last remittance of the Customs Surplus revenue from Peking amounted to only $548,000, which was considerably less than the amount which the establishment of the college originally called for. However, Dr. Wu is willing to allot the Tls. 850,000 now in Hongkong to be used for that purpose and the decision is endorsed by the other Administrative directors, Dr. Sun Yat-sen, Mr. Tang Shao-yi and General Tang Chi-yao, by his agent, General Li Lieh-chun.

(Reuter's Service)

Cairo, June 12.—An unsuccessful attempt was made to assassinate the Premier with a bomb this morning.

Interviewed by Reuter, the Premier said that he was motoring to his office when a powerful bomb was hurled at his car. The chauffeur and two passers-by were wounded.

The assailant fled, but was pursued by a policeman, who continued the pursuit although twice wounded by the assailant's automatic pistol. The fugitive took refuse in a house where he was arrested.

The Premier was somewhat shaken but carried on his duties. He described his escape as due to the direct intervention of Providence.

JAP STEAMER LOOTED; AGENT IS MURDERED

Only Shell Of Wooling Maru Left By Pirates Near Liangtan

(Reuter's Pacific Service)

The Wooling Maru is expected in Hankow tomorrow.

The sub-agent of the Nisshin Kisen Kaisha was shot dead during the looting. General Chang Ching-yao, before he left, blew up his yamen with its supply of munitions and burnt down the Changsha barracks. Some foreigners in Hankow are taking out insurance against risks from riot or revolution but so far no alarm is being shown.

SENDS PROTEST

Peking, June 14.—Prior to the issue of the Chang Ching-yao mandate, the Cabinet sent a strong protest to Generals Tsen Chun-hsuan and Lu Yung-ting against the Southern advance, asking whether General Tan Yen-kai was subject to their authority.

SWISS THREATENS TO KILL AMERICAN EXECUTIVE CONSUL

M. Winteler To Be Detained Here Until Sent To Japan On June 22

Warrant for the arrest of M. Winteler, Swiss, and his detention until his deportation on June 22 was issued yesterday in the Mixed Court upon application of Mr. R. C. Faithfull, police legal advisor, on behalf of Mr. M. F. Perkins, United States Administrative Consul at Shanghai. Applicant alleged that the accused had given him until last night to make up his mind as to what kind of compensation he was prepared to give accused for alleged illegal detention, or accused would shoot him.

Consul Perkins has received, since his return from Changsha, several letters signed by the accused and full of threatening passages. One of these was three and a half pages of foolscap. Counsel pointed out that this showed that the man was mentally wrong.

It will be remembered that in the Spring of 1918, the prisoner was brought up before Mr. Perkins, who was then sitting as American Assessor, and an inquiry into his mental state was ordered. Winteler was detained and later ordered to be removed from the Settlement, but the Assessor said that he would be prepared to reconsider the decision after a report had been received from the Swiss Diplomatic Representative in Tokio. However, he must get the consent of the Mixed Court before returning to this city.

Winteler returned to Shanghai without first securing the consent of the authorities.

Armenia and an expenditure of $75,000,000 for five years.

The Republican party will oppose the acceptance of a mandate for any country in Europe or Asia.

OPPOSES TREATY

The platform opposes the Versailles treaty and the League of Nations; commends Republican Senators for not ratifying the treaty; advocates an "International Court of Justice" and pledges the coming Republican administration to such an agreement as will meet the full duties of America to civilisation and humanity.

The treaty plank declares that the covenant of the League of Nations has signally failed to accomplish peace, and has unjustifiably repudiated the policies of George Washington and James Monroe.

It declares that the "unfortunate" insistence of President Wilson on having his own way compelled Senators to "vote on their own judgment or to submit to the commands of a dictator."

The platform condemns the Government's Mexican policy and pledges the Republican party to follow a firm policy towards that country.

MUCH SPECULATION

Americans resident in China, setting aside their partisan prejudices, yesterday discussed the effect of the nomination of Senator Harding as G. O. P. standard-bearer and the effect of the adopted platform upon the voting constituency of the nation.

The consensus of opinion seemed to be that the adoption of the Johnsonian ideas of opposition to the Treaty and the League would give the Democrats an opportunity to campaign on a straight endorsement of those measures, with more vigor and chances of victory than existed heretofore.

The working of these and other phosphate depots in Morocco is reserved as a monopoly of the government of Morocco.

Two Classes Of Men In World—Regular And Not, Says California Banker

Mr. And Mrs. C. H. Crocker Visit Shanghai While "Playing Around" In Far East; Are Guests Of Prince While Seeing Capital Of Siam

"He's a regular fellow," quoth Mr. C. H. Crocker, capitalist, banker, printer, stationer, bookbinder, publisher, expert on sugar and Lieut. Commander of the U. S. Naval Coast Reserve during the war, last night as he settled himself into an easy chair in the lounge of the Astor House and discussed Prince Songkla, brother of the King of Siam.

And in that brief sentence the San Francisco capitalist sounded the keynote of his outlook on life. Everyone he meets is "regular" or not.

Mr. Crocker and Mrs. Crocker are spending a few days in Shanghai—just playing. That's what they've been doing most of the time since they left the California coast on February 19 and that's what they expect to devote most of their time to until Admission Day, when they hope to arrive at the Golden Gate.

SUGAR IS EXCUSE

Of course a man who has led such a busy life as that of Mr. Crocker can't "just play" all at once and so he's fooling himself into believing that he's investigating the sugar situation in the Far East. But, in spite of the fact that he is president of the Alameda Sugar Company and a director of the Union Sugar Company, it is noticeable, and naturally, must be whispered gently, his itinerary has been so carefully planned that there has been a scarcity of sugar on the menu.

He did salve his conscience by a visit to the Calambra and Pampamgos sugar mills in the Philippines and investigated the industry in the Malay Peninsula and Siam, he is taking up the subject in China and will do so in other parts of the Orient before his return home and it is a safe guess that he will arrive in San Francisco with a comprehensive idea of just what the sugar outlook is on "the bottom of the world." But he likes to pretend that it is all fun and no work and insists that such dry things as statistics have no appeal to him—but he absorbs them just the same.

"I guess it's habit," he remarked when he was chided on the subject.

When the Crockers left San Francisco they had no intention of going to Siam. Then they boarded a ship at Manila and met a most charming young chap who was just out of Harvard. He hadn't been graduated, although he was in the senior class of the current school year, because, he explained, he had been called home to attend the cremation ceremonies of a relative.

MEET A PRINCE

It was the Prince, summoned to Bangkok for the cremation of the Queen Mother.

He is to return to Harvard this fall to complete his studies.

The youth, whose rank was unknown to his American friends then just as it remained secret to his classmates during his first two years in Harvard, proved to be a charming companion and when, upon parting from the Crockers at Singapore, he suggested that they come to Bangkok for the ceremonial they gladly complied. During their stay in the Siamese capital the Americans were shown every courtesy by their royal host.

Mr. Crocker has closed out to other owners the business of which he has long been the head at San Francisco, the H. S. Crocker Company, but is still vice-president of the American National Bank and the Italian American Bank there. When he agreed to take the office of president of the Alameda Sugar Company, which at the time was in the need of a firm guiding hand, he stipulated that he should be allowed to step out for a vacation at any time he felt the urge. His terms were more than willingly accepted and after he had the concern running smoothly he "packed his kit bag" and started on a jaunt through the Orient.

From Shanghai the Crockers may go to Peking or they may decide to view the Yangtsze Gorges. They haven't fully made up their minds on that question as yet.

U.S. Aero Mail Service Has Second Anniversary

son of the operation of the service between Washington and New York, there has been a saving to the Government at the rate of $42,500 a year and a saving between New York and Chicago at a rate of more than $100,000 a year. That means that in carrying first-class mail matter which requires distribution on the trains the Air Mail operates more cheaply than do the distributing cars on trains, wherever there is a large quantity of mail to despatch.

FLYING GREAT GAIN

Of all of the complex transportation problems the matter of mail transportation is the most complicated. In the case of the Air Mail, for instance, the route from New York to Washington is not for the purpose of advancing mail over train service from New York City to the city of Washington but to insure the delivery of New England mail in the city of Washington in the afternoon instead of the following morning if it had come by train. This mail reaches New York early in the morning by the night trains from New England and in two and a half hour flying time is set down in Washington. The result is that it is all delivered by the afternoon carriers. Flying from Washington to New York, however, there is a great gain in the receipt of letters in New York city from the entire South. Mail worked to carriers on trains, is taken from the trains in Washington and delivered in New York City early that afternoon. Had the mail continued to New York by train it would not have reached there until after all carrier deliveries had ended and the letters would have been delivered the following day.

In the movement of mail by airplane from New York to Chicago, the mail that is taken out of New York early in the morning for Chicago is not for the patrons of the Chicago office but for the States of the West and the Middle West. This mail is taken off the plane at Cleveland and placed on board a train bound for Chicago which insures catching earlier connections at Chicago for the West and Middle West. Such mail is almost invariably advanced 6 hours to the persons addressed.

CARRY 30,000 LETTERS

At Cleveland the mail is taken off the train which left New York City at 5:30 o'clock the afternoon before and which train would have reached Chicago too late for carrier deliveries, and is carried by airplane into Chicago in time to catch all of the carrier deliveries that afternoon in that city. The result is that the mail is delivered to the people of Chicago on the afternoon instead of the following morning. By this arrangement 800 pounds of mail a day, or more than 30,000 letters, are expedited about 16 hours in deliveries to the patrons; whereas if only Chicago city mail had been taken out of New York only 400 pounds of mail could have been expedited. It means an expedition of 30,000 letters 16 hours, rather than the expedition of 15,000 letters from 20 to 24 hours.

Until the transcontinental route is established and service actually begins from New York to San Francisco, the Chicago-Omaha route will be merely for the purpose of expediting the mail between Chicago and Omaha. When the New York-Frisco route starts, however, the Air Mail, which will leave New York at daybreak, will be in Omaha that same day before sunset. Mail leaving New York Monday morning will arrive in San Francisco by 9 o'clock Wednesday morning. The best schedule that can be made by train would be taking mail leaving New York at 3:40 p.m. and delivering it in San Francisco at 12:30 p.m. on the fourth day. The Railway Mail Service can accomplish this only if they make the transcontinental connection at Chicago, and this connection is missed whenever the train is as much as an hour late. On the average, the train leaving New York at 3:40 p.m. misses this connection 40 percent of the time and the mail takes 24 hours longer to get to San Francisco. During the month of January 1920, owing to blizzards, the 3:40 train out of New York missed this transcontinental connection out of Chicago 100 percent of the time.

BEATS TRAIN MANY HOURS

The Air Mail can be 12 hours behind its schedule from New York to San Francisco and still beat the train mail into the Golden Gate City by 20 hours if the train connection is made at Chicago, and by 44 hours if that connection is missed.

This is only the beginning of commercial aviation in the United States. It is being accomplished with military planes which are not adapted for commercial service. The work that has been done by the Post Office Department has received perhaps greater recognition in Europe than it has by the people of this country. Foreign diplomatic representatives have sent the fullest reports to their Governments about the Air Mail operations and have expressed to the Post Office Department their heartfelt admiration of the service its dependability and economy of operation.

The Air Mail has made many contributions to aviation, the greatest of these being the salvaging and rebuilding for commercial work of more than 100 De Haviland war planes, and finally, the transformation of the single motored De Haviland plane into the double motored plane, either of whose two motors can keep the airplane in the air and enable it to reach its destination.

At the recent Aeronautical Show, in New York City, the greatest advance shown in airplane construction consisted of two ships built originally for the Post Office Department. One of these is the largest ship ever constructed in America, which can carry two tons of letters, and the other is a specially designed mail ship which can carry a mail load equal to 50 percent of its own weight. Heretofore one of the elements of expense in carrying mail by airplane has been that an airplane had to carry three-fourths of its total load as dead load with only a 25 percent commercial load.

EXCELLENT STAFF

The Air Mail has developed a staff of excellent aeronautical mechanics, the result of whose work is seen by the records of some of its pilots. One notable instance was that of a pilot who in eight months made 106 trips with but a single forced landing, due to mechanical trouble. On the Chicago-Cleveland division in 1919, 205 consecutive trips of 325 miles each were made without a forced landing for any cause whatever. The Air Mail has come to New York from Washington and from Chicago in gales and snow storms which tied up harbor shipping. It has arrived in Cleveland and in Chicago when it was the only means of transportation operative. During the recent tornado that passed over Ohio and Illinois, in which 103 persons were killed and the buildings in cities and villages wrecked, the Air Mail made its flight through that storm and arrived safely with the mail in Chicago.

In the two years' operation of the Air Mail Service, only six pilots have lost their lives while transporting the mail.

Two years of the closest attention to every detail in the operation and development of the Air Mail Service has demonstrated that it will supplement every present mode of transportation but it will not for some years supplant them nor even cut into their operations to be felt as a financial factor. There is nothing in prospect Second Assistant Postmaster General Praeger says, that would justify any man in saying that the airplane soon will carry all of the mail or all of the passenger transportation of the country, but it will ever be a most effective aid in speeding up commerce and production through efficiently covering those operations of transportation requiring excessive speed at increased cost over existing media.

Co-incident with the formation of the association, Mr. Alexander H. Ford, the Union's general secretary who was himself an enthusiastic promoter, is on his way to China in company with the 186 Congressmen on the Transport Great Northern, which will sail from San Francisco on July 5.

Mr. George Fitch, one of the promoters of yesterday's association, expects to meet the party in Manila, where the solons are due towards the latter part of this month. He will escort the party to Shanghai.

As Shanghai is the first port which the congressmen will touch after their visit to Hawaii and the Philippines, the Central Administration will deputize a special commission to welcome the visitors. A special train will be placed at the disposal of the guests from Shanghai, through Nanking, on to Peking and to Mukden, from which city the Japanese Government will entertain them.

A building and headquarters were secured in Honolulu and with the aid given to it by the governments and private individuals, its work has been carried out very effectively.

Japan Will Wait For China, Report

(Reuter's Pacific Service)

Peking, June 15.—Mr. Obata, the Japanese Minister, handed a note to the Waichiaopu yesterday afternoon in reply to the Chinese refusal to begin negotiations regarding the return of Kiaochao.

The note says that, as China finds it inconvenient at present to negotiate on the subject, Japan will wait until China is ready.

The note then clearly states that Japan is ready to withdraw the Japanese railway guards from the Shantung railway as soon as China makes arrangements to replace the guards. This withdrawal, the note explains, is not to be contingent upon the opening of negotiations.

It is understood that the full text of the note will shortly be published in Tokio.

Unique Affair To Take Place Today; Is First Class To Complete Work

A unique affair is to take place this afternoon at Martyr's Memorial Hall, 12 Szecheun Road, at 5 o'clock, when the first twelve pupils from the Institution for the Chinese Blind are to receive their diplomas on completion of the work prescribed for them.

Those who have watched this interesting institution grow step by step during the past seven years feel that a great advance has been made and that now as the first fruits are beginning to appear have only praise for those who are responsible for the excellent start that had been made. Not only are these blind lads learning to help themselves but they are assisting others.

A few months ago when the Hunan Famine relief committee gave their big entertainments for raising money, these boys gave two two-hour programs, and at present in one of the large Chinese theaters, giving entertainments for the purpose of raising money for the Rice Relief Fund, these boys are again drawing cards and the enthusiastic overcrowded houses auger well for the success of this much needed relief.

A few invitations have been sent out but all who have time and care to attend the exercises are invited. Mr. E. C. Pearce has consented to be chairman and Mr. Yang Tcheng will give the diplomas and prizes.

PEKING WON'T PERMIT WANG TO RESIGN

(Reuter's Pacific Service)

Peking, June 15.—General Chang Ching-yao is on his way to Peking. General Wang Chang-yuan has requested the Government to cancel his appointment as commander-in-chief of the troops in Hunan. The Government has refused, pointing out that it is his duty to accept the responsibility, in view of the serious issues involved.

General Wang Chang-yuan belongs to the Chihli party, which supports the President, while General Wu Kuang-hsin is a follower of Marshal Tuan Chi-jui, though he is not an active member of the Anfu Party; hence the appointment of the latter as Inspecting Commissioner in Hunan appears to be likely to sow seeds of discord.

As a follower of Marshal Tuan Chi-jui, General Wu is intended as a check to General Wang Chang-yuan, and it is doubtful how the forces of the two will mix.

General Wu Kuang-hsin has already telegraphed to the Government stating that he has appointed General Tao Yun-hao, the commander of the 3rd Mixed Brigade, to be commander on the Yochow front and General Chin Yun-hsiao, the commander of the eighteenth Mixed Brigade, to command the forces in the rear.

The Government has sent two aeroplanes from Nanyuan to Hunan for service.

It is understood that the necessity of making all payments in dollars will shortly force the railway to cut out the rouble note.

SHORT AND SOUR

BY 'BUGS' BAER

HOMEOPATHIC WARDROBES

The first news of the world's premier laundry list is contained in the Garden of Edam society column. Adam was in the counting house counting out his income tax. Eve was in the kitchen eating bread and honey, along comes a blackbird and chewed six evening fig gowns right off their stems. It spoiled Eve's whole Winter.

* * *

It looks as if the shriller sex was going right back to fig leaves so fast that they are liable to slide right past 'em. A ma cherie over in Paris is wearing three-and-a-half ounces of clothes and getting round-shouldered under the terrific burden. Three-and-a-half ounces of buttons is sure some homeopathetic wardrobe. The buttonholes are thrown in extra.

* * *

The present style is really three ounces but the extra half-ounce is thrown in as a sop to the narrow-minded gargoyles of conservatism.

* * *

You notice we tie those three-and-a-half ounces together with hyphens. Hyphens are the nearest thing in type to safety pins. Being a family newspaper, we take no chances on anything working loose. If the three-and-a-half-ounces epidemic ever wallops our fair city, the husbands will have to wear dumb-bells on their eyelids to keep their eyes from flying off like loose door-knobs.

* * *

Three-and-a-half ounces isn't much protection from the blistering sun and the freezing steam heat, but the invention of a new weather-proof beauty spot precludes all possibility of the light-weightettes catching pneumonia from a stray breeze working through their four-layer complexions.

* * *

Too much has been already chirped about the skirt question. If you must criticise skirts, make it brief. When talking about skirts; the shorter the better. The girls are shedding their cocoons in order to gyp the high cost of low necks and bring the skirt manufacturers to their knees. They have the skirts to the knees now.

* * *

Woman is the rib of man. She ribs him up for fat millinery bills and you never saw the man who admits he chirped "Yes" willingly. He always claims he was ribbed up by the minister—and the license clerk. Woman is the rib of man, and she is showing it more every day. Three-and-a-half ounces of clothes is carrying the fashion craze too far. The whole world will squawk against this latest outrage. It's too much.

* * *

Ribs being a ticklish question, it is not politic to state what articles compose the three-and-a-half-ounce costume, but it's a safe bet that you won't have to weigh the waist on a hay scale.

* * *

Each shoe lace must weigh an ounce, which leaves an ounce-and-a-half for a hat or a parasol.

* * *

If women are going to dress that way, then the Puritans, Oliver Cromwell, the Signers of the Declaration, Daniel Webster and Anthony Comstock lived too soon.

MINISTER SPEAKS

In addressing President Hsu, Mr. Crane said:

"It is with feelings of peculiar pleasure that I appear before Your Excellency as representative of the government of the United States of America accredited to the government of the Republic of China.

"Some forty years ago it was my good fortune to visit the then Empire of China. It was with the keenest interest that I became for the first time personally acquainted with those institutions that had for centuries guided the destinies of the millions of China's population.

"Not only was I impressed with the antiquity of the origin of these institutions, but I was filled with admiration of those qualities of obedience for authority, respect for learning and orderly industry that I found permeating the masses of the Chinese people.

"In consequence of this early visit, and because of the profound importance that I have always attached to the gradual modification of these ancient institutions and the awakening of the intelligence of China to the conditions of modern society abroad, I have never ceased to feel the deepest interest in all pertaining to the Government and the people of this great country.

"Needless to say in returning to China in recent years I have been struck by the magnitude of the transformation that has taken place in things governmental, economic and social.

"But it has been a source of gratification and re-assurance to me as to all friends of China, to note that through the turmoil that inevitably accompanies such radical changes as have occurred in these lines in the last decade those admirable qualities that I discerned in the people of China on the occasion of my first visit have proved the dominating force in controlling events.

WAS IMPRESSED

"When the President of the United States of America conferred upon me the distinguished honor of inviting me to become the representative of my country in China I was not only at once impressed with the opportunity that I should be thus afforded to continue under the most highly advantageous circumstances my study of Chinese affairs, but I was keenly conscious that I should be thus in a unique position to accomplish that which had long been my highest aspiration, that is, to acquaint the government and the people of China with the feeling of sympathy and warm friendliness that animate the entire body of my fellow countrymen towards China and to make effective, so far as my limited abilities permit, the desire of my government and of my fellow citizens to assist the people of China in arriving at that position among the peoples of the world to which their vast numbers and their sterling qualities alike entitle them.

MESSAGE TO CHINA

"In delivering to Your Excellency the letter of recall of my distinguished predecessor, the Honorable Paul S. Reinsch, and in presenting my own letter of credence addressed to Your Excellency by the President of the United States of America I am most happy in bringing a personal message of friendship from the President, and I desire to express to Your Excellency my earnest hope that during the period of my office the relations between our two nations may uniformly progress along their accustomed line of ever-deepening cordiality and intimacy."

PRESIDENT HSU'S REPLY

President Hsu replied:

"The terms of cordiality and affection with which you have presented your letter of credence have awakened in me genuine gratitude and emotion. That the President of the United States should have selected as the representative of America one who for forty years has studied so closely our history and our traditions, and who has expressed his faith in our future in the language you have employed is a circumstance which cannot but be looked upon by the Chinese nation as a most happy augury. The deep interest you feel in all matters pertaining to the Government and people of China is reciprocated by us; for today, there can scarcely be a Chinese citizen who is unacquainted with the fact that it was the example of the United States in the modern world which has largely served as our beacon and our guide ever since we decided to modify our ancient institutions by the creation of the Republic.

I RAISES PROGRESS

"You are good enough to say, Mr. Minister, that, in the intervals which have elapsed between your successive visits to our country, you have noted that change has been constantly accompanied by progress, and that there is justification for our belief that we shall fully succeed in remodelling the structure of our administration while leaving untouched the ancient bases of our democracy, which are love of family and love of soil.

"The transformation which is even now taking place is necessarily gradual and step by step, since it must be primarily the diffusion of modern ideas and their free acceptance by one and all which will complete the reform which the declaration of the Republic was the design.

FILLED WITH HOPE

"That I, the Chief Executive, may ever count on your cordial friendship and co-operation fills me with fresh hope. The close relations which your learned predecessor, the Honorable Paul S. Reinsch, succeeded in establishing between our two Governments, have fitly ushered in the new period of reconstruction and revaluation which now faces all the world.

"In thanking you, Mr. Minister, for your distinguished sentiments, may I ask you to convey to the President of the United States a message of perpetual goodwill from the Chinese people to the people of his great country."

BIG DINNER

The American Association of South China gave a dinner in honor of Minister Crane at the Hotel Wagon Lits at which more than 200 Americans were present from Tientsin, Peking and other cities. Mr. R. F. Baker, Advisor to the Ministry of Communications, presided and gave the address of welcome to which Mr. Crane responded with a witty speech that was keenly appreciated. Dancing followed the dinner.

COUNTESS SEEKS ROMANCE IN U. S. BUT GETS IN JAIL

Divorcee, Who Came As Bride Of A. E. F. Officer, Held On Arson Charge

LIVED IN BANGOR SHACK

Now It Is Alleged She Burned Village Home To Collect Insurance

Bangor, Me., April 29.—Countess Hermance Gretner de Beck, who startled this town by her beauty and rich display of jewelry, furs and finery when she came here last year as the bride of George L. Nelson, former Lieutenant of engineers in the A. E. F., was today arrested and, with her husband, held in $20,000 bail for examination by the Grand Jury on a charge of arson. The Countess is said to have confessed to the crime to the District Attorney before her arraignment. The maximum penalty for the alleged offense is twenty years' imprisonment.

The career of the Countess has abounded in romance, with Paris, London, Vienna and other European cities as the background. A few years ago she was the wife of Count de Beck, a Hungarian diplomat, with whom she lived a life of luxury in London. She either divorced him or he divorced her—at any rate, she was living in Paris during the latter days of the World War.

CAME TO MARRY OFFICER

It was while coming to the United States to marry an officer of the Old 69th Infantry, whom she had met in France, that the Countess met Nelson. He was returning with his command. Nine spring nights on the Atlantic, plus the ardent wooing of the young officer, soon caused the Countess to change her marriage plans.

Nelson and the Countess presently appeared in Bangor, and Nelson's courtship, together with the alluring mystery surrounding the Countess, soon made them the cynosure of the town. Last October the marriage took place in the public parlors of the Bangor House, and shortly afterward Nelson brought his wife to Carmel, a small village, nine miles distant, to make their home.

Here the life of comfort to which, it is reported, the Countess had always been accustomed ceased abruptly. For the house in which her soldier husband installed her was indeed short of being a mansion; in fact, it lacked even the common conveniences. Yet, oddly enough, the couple seemed so deeply in love that even the harshness of life in the little Maine village did not alter their attachment.

THRILLING RESCUE TOLD

At 3 o'clock on the morning of March 4 last the shack went up in flames. The couple went to a neighbor's home for a few days, where Nelson related a tale of their thrilling escape from cremation. The Countess, it seemed had been the heroine. A pet Angora kitten had awakened her by wildly clawing her face. She found the house completely ablaze. She aroused Nelson, and he, finding the key mislaid, hurled her through a second story window, where she landed without mishap in a snow bank. He then followed with an armful of belongings, including the Angora kitten.

The scene now shifts to the agency in Bangor where Nelson and his bride had taken out insurance on their home and contents—mostly on the contents. They had tried to get $29,000 insurance by describing the contents as a large quantity of women's costly finery, furs, rich rugs and laces, a few valuable paintings and a number of diamonds and pearls.

VALUABLES WERE BROUGHT

Investigation by the insurance company has disclosed that the Countess actually did bring from London with her costly articles. It is known they sold at least $6,000 worth of diamonds in Bangor. Nelson tried to sell an expansive wrist watch to Mayor Woods.

Destruction of such property in the ramshackle little dwelling in Carmel struck the insurance company as incongruous. Inquiries have resulted in the discovery, it is said, of evidence that almost all of the valuables were removed before the blaze. Only a number of cheap things bought by Nelson on the installment plan and never paid for, were destroyed, the insurance company alleges.

Sheriff Fernandez traced the couple to Boston with a warrant and brought them back to Bangor. Residents are now looking forward with keen anticipation to the trial at the term of the Superior Court next Tuesday.

Certain-teed

Paints and Varnishes are Carefully Planned

A cardinal rule of Certain-teed manufacture is to plan each paint or varnish to meet the specific use to which it will be put. If it is to be applied to a surface that receives frequent rubbing or cleaning, then it is made to stand frequent rubbing. If it is exposed to the elements, then it is made to withstand the elements. The raw materials are carefully selected, carefully prepared, and carefully mixed, under the direction of experienced paint makers.

Certain-teed Paints and Varnishes have been planned for every use to which paint or varnish can be put; for interior walls, ceiling, woodwork, floors and furniture; for exterior walls, roofs, porches, out buildings and porch furniture. In every case it will be found that Certain-teed looks better, spreads farther and lasts longer than ordinary paint, because it is planned for the purpose.

Screen Paint

Certain-teed Screen Paint is manufactured especially for use on window screens and screen doors, both wire and frame work. By applying one or two coats you will improve the appearance and add years of service to your screens.

Health, Beauty And The Home

More Vegetables

By Mrs. Christine Frederick,

The Distinguished Authority on Household Efficiency.

HAS that "Spring fever" reached you yet? If it does I am sure you know what it means. As I have said so often, the body is like a stove which has become choked with the debris of Winter feeding and fuel. Just as we completely clean out our furnaces, so we need to clean out our systems at this time of the year.

Meat, fried foods, syrup, all the griddle cake family and the gravy must go. It is thumbs down for them for the time being. What the system needs now is vegetables, fruits and some scouring food such as bran. Indeed, one of the best practices would be to go on a bran diet for at least a day. To do this eat a bowl of bran at each of the regular meals in place of other food. You may add hot water or hot milk or fruit juice to it, and that is all you are to eat.

I remember once being "overlooked" by a good doctor on my return from a six months' trip lecturing for the Government. The moment she saw me and had taken her diagnosis she said, "You need a housecleaning," and instantly she put me on a fruit and bran diet. This is simply the eating of any kind of fruit of not too acid a nature with bran for at least a day or preferably longer. There is no fat, starch or protein in this diet. It acts as a scouring soap or powder on our alimentary tract and gives our poor stomachs a rest.

Vegetables are nature's own food. All of the grains are vegetables and it is from them that we get our basic wheat, oatmeal, rice, etc. All vegetable matter consists of fibrous material in which are imbedded varying portions of starch. But the great value comes from the fibrous material. It is rough, it has "bulk" or "roughage," and thus stimulates peristaltic or excretory action. And this is what we, in our over-civilization, need so badly. Most of us sit long hours so that the muscles of the abdomen are not exercised, and hence we become sluggish in our bodily functions. But a large quantity of vegetables will prevent this in a natural manner.

Of course, the more vegetables we eat raw the better, because cooking softens the fibres and also causes some chemical changes which are not so desirable. For example, raw cabbage or raw carrots eaten in salad form give better results than the same foods cooked. But in any case the average family table should be more plentifully supplied with vegetables of all kinds.

"But they are so dear," I hear housewives exclaim. Then we can do one of two things—we can raise them ourselves if we have any kind of a piece of ground or we can omit some other article of diet and save this cost toward the expense of vegetables. Also we housekeepers can learn to cook or prepare vegetables so that there is a far smaller percentage of waste than is usually the case.

In the Spring, also, many of us may be able to find dandelions, dock and other greens free for the gathering. I am willing to prepare for any one who comes to visit me a dandelion hot slaw which I am sure they will say is delicious and which has untold values as a tonic. Also there are dandelion salad and dandelion cream soup, both of which give us the bitter, stimulating quality of the dandelion.

I think it is worth any housewife's trip to market to get fruits and vegetables if her local dealer does not carry them. If storage facilities are good a large basket or crate can be ordered and then divided up among neighbors. There is no reason why two or three families should not share their buying if they can thus obtain better products and better value than alone. For example, in the Spring season it is possible to buy a tall half-bushel basket of lettuce, spinach, etc., at a wholesale price. If one neighbor in turn orders such containers and divides among her friends there will be a great saving over small individual purchases of the local dealer.

I have found that my dealer will order for me and sell me at his wholesale price (I to pay the express or other charges) any large basket or container of vegetables such as he himself buys. For instance, I have often bought from him a half bushel of string beans or lettuce or carrots, etc., and then used about half myself and sold the other half to neighbors.

Any woman who complains to me vegetables cost so much must answer me how much she pays for meat. Generally I find that she is spending from 50 cents to $1 for the meat alone for a family of three or four. I ask her then to take this dollar and buy with it vegetables. Three bunches of asparagus or two large heads of lettuce and a generous quantity of carrots, beans, beets or new cabbage can be bought for a dollar. The whole point is she does not compare the cost of vegetables with the cost of meat, but compares the cost of vegetables now with their cost several years ago.

But she may say that vegetables do not replace meat in the diet and that, therefore, it is not fair to spend the same sum of money on vegetables as on meat. There are many vegetables which do serve as meat equivalents. Even if you ate a whole bunch of asparagus or several servings of carrots you could make up the slight deficiency in protein by a tablespoon of peanut butter or of cheese or a glass of milk. The thing for the woman to do is to think of vegetables not as accessories, but as the important food of the meal, especially at this season. Meat will only serve to clog up the body, to create a feeling of lassitude and make doctor's bills.

All of us need to know how to cook vegetables better. When someone was asked what was the American national dish the reply was "white sauce!" And it is true that this pasty and generally poorly made sauce smothers all our vegetables.

There is a great art in preparing vegetables, as is so well known by the French. Every kind of sauce—drawn butter, vinegar sauces, sauces with herbs and dozens of variations—may be used. One of the best books in this connection is "The New Cookery," by Lenna Cooper, which deals exclusively with the cooking of vegetable foods.

The Great American Sin, as I have so often said, is cooking vegetables in a great quantity of water, lifting out the vegetables and throwing the water down the sink spout. Yet the sink does not need mineral salts! Why cook in such a fashion as to waste most of the valuable ingredients? All vegetables should be cooked in a small quantity of water, and with the exception of beets the water may be used in a soup or in a sauce.

Also why do we so carelessly pare vegetables when it is near the outer skin that the most valuable elements are found? There are potato parers which take far less peeling than knives, and all kinds of scraping devices for the same purpose. Also why pare carrots and parsnips and turnips? If parboiled the skin will slip off easily, leaving the vegetable in good shape and with the greatest nutriment.

I think one reason why men do not like vegetables in general is because of all the foods on hotel or restaurant menus vegetables are the most abominably cooked. Unfortunately, owing to the extent of our canning industry, it is almost impossible to secure a fresh vegetable in any hotel of the highest class. And this is just the difference between our middle-class eating places and those abroad, where the cooking of vegetables is made a fine art and where every dish is garnished with "aux herbes fines" or the vegetable is made into a "plat" of distinction by itself.

For the Neck

By Lina Cavalieri,

The Most Famous Living Beauty.

WHEN you want to wear a pretty low neck cut V in front or in the square effect, but are deterred from doing so because your neck is too dark, I would recommend this home remedy as being exceedingly useful for bleaching purposes when less drastic remedies are not at hand: One-half lemon, one small tumbler of water. Squeeze the lemon juice into the glass and bathe the skin of the neck frequently with the mixture.

For those whose skin is especially sensitive—and there are many who cannot use peroxide of hydrogen full strength for bleaching—I would recommend: Peroxide of hydrogen, one-half wineglass; witch hazel, one-half wineglass.

To bleach a neck that is too oily this used once a day for three successive days is helpful: Rosewater, one-half wineglass; ammonia, five drops. Use this sparingly, however, for the action of ammonia upon the skin is to make it exceedingly dry.

The woman who would preserve a lovely neck must consider it even in repose. She should never use a high pillow, and preferably no pillow at all. For when the head rests upon the pillow the chin falls upon the breast. The muscles of the neck are contracted, wrinkles are formed and the muscles become flabby. Lying on the back is the best posture for sleeping. The muscles of the neck are thus given full play and rest.

Many times I am asked: "If you had a mole on the neck what would you do?" I would let it remain there and be thankful I had a distinguishing mark, a beauty spot. But if you insist upon removing it a physician might try the electric needle on it.

I have been asked, too, how to remove superfluous hair from the neck. I should not remove it, for I should not regard it as superfluous. I do not dislike hair upon either the face or the neck unless it is unusually heavy. This hair is beautiful. It is like the down upon the peach.

Sometimes the collar supporter, or a hook used for fastening the collar, scratches the neck. For these or any other bruises of the neck I should first bathe the injured part with absorbent cotton dipped into peroxide of hydrogen. If the bruise is severe I would apply collodion or court plaster to protect it from floating air-germs while healing. When I am ready to remove these I can moisten them with alcohol. If this precaution is not taken a bit of the skin or the flesh might adhere to the application, so causing a scar.

When the new skin is formed, covering the wound, I would try to massage it once a day very gently. This relieves the congestion and gradually removes the disfiguring red line that might remain.

A travelling companion of mine once scraped her neck against a deck railing while the ship tossed. She treated it as I have advised and when there still remained a broad pink stain as a souvenir of the accident she massaged it very lightly every day for a fortnight, when the pink scar utterly disappeared.

If your neck is suffering from wearing a too high collar I recommend one of the following recipes: Equal parts of peroxide and water, or equal parts of glycerine and rosewater, to which a few drops of carbolic acid have been added for antiseptic reasons.

Another simple remedy for a neck that is too dark is equal parts of alcohol (95 per cent) and water, or one-half lemon juice and one-half water. Still another effective remedy is water, one-half pint; ammonia, one dram.

Sometimes a good plan is to scrub the neck with a soft complexion brush dipped into a warm lather of castile soap with a few drops of ammonia added.

For a neck that has been tanned by the sun, and this can happen even in the Winter when one is skating or taking long walks, or engaging in any one of the healthy out-of-doors sports, the best way to whiten the skin is to massage it with a pure cold cream and bathe it frequently with a mild solution of peroxide of hydrogen.

As with all other parts of the body, the real beauty of the neck depends largely upon the way it is dressed. So be very careful to choose becoming colors for your evening gowns and have them designed in a mode that will suit your individuality. Put plenty of powder on your skin, too. Pure rice powder can do no harm if removed at night with cold cream and greatly enhances the charm of a beautiful neck and shoulders.

Britain Penalises U. S. On War Bills

Five Percent Tacked On Supplies Unpaid In Thirty Days

Washington, April 28.—Great Britain is demanding and the United States is to pay 5 percent interest on all accounts for war supplies that were not paid by the United States within thirty days.

The interest charge brought by Great Britain on Navy Department purchases alone aggregates $50,000. Though surprised at the charge, Navy Department officials intend to pay the bills received. This country made no similar charges and has been asked to postpone, and is postponing the collection of interest on loans made to the British Government.

Efforts have been made by the Administration to keep the entire matter secret. A part of the record placed on a public file in the Treasury Department was withdrawn and is now somewhere in secret archives. Officials of both departments are non-committal with regard to the details, and it is not known how many claims of bills have been presented to the War Department, the Shipping Board and other Government agencies or how much they will aggregate. No public announcement with regard to the transactions involved has been made.

When the United States entered the war and sent its fleet to British waters and began despatching troops to Europe, the Allies were asked and offered to furnish equipment and supplies. Many American naval ships operated out of British bases and were supplied by the British Government.

Orders for the things required that the British could furnish were frequently oral. Government vouchers for them, as is usual, were frequently a long time getting through. The Navy Department request for a decision regarding the payments stated that it was not known at the time purchases were made that 5 percent interest would be charged on all accounts that ran for more than thirty days.

CRIPPLE WINS ARMY PRIZE

Chicago, April 29.—Jimmie O'Malley, aged 16, able to move only two fingers and his head because of paralysis, today received the War Department's silver cup for writing the best essay on "What the Army Has to Offer a Young Man."

The cup, together with another from a local bank, a gold watch from the Fort Sheridan Recall and $100 from the Knights of Columbus, was presented by Col. Jackson, a member of Major General Leonard Wood's staff. The presentation took place in the Spauding School, where Jimmy and 400 other crippled persons are being educated.

The Democratic Outlook

ALTHOUGH the Reuter telegrams dealing with the platform adopted by the Republican National Convention are by no means complete and full as they ought to be considering the international importance of the matter dealt with, they make one point fairly clear and that is that the Republican Party has repudiated everything that President Wilson did at Paris.

The platform commits the Republican party to the policy of making a separate peace with Germany.

It opposes the acceptance by America of a mandate for any country in Europe or Asia and especially condemns the President for asking Congress to empower him to accept the mandate for Armenia.

It specifically opposes the Versailles Treaty and the League of Nations and advocates an international Court of Justice.

It commends the Republican Senators for declining to ratify the treaty of Peace, but pledges the Republican Administration, in case it shall prove successful in the election of next November, to make such an agreement with the other powers as will meet the full duties of America to civilisation and humanity.

It further declares that the Covenant of the League of Nations has signally failed to accomplish peace, and affirms that any League of Nations to obtain its approval must accord with the ideals of George Washington. This probably means that the Republican Party will oppose joining any League of Nations if such action should partake of the nature of "entangling foreign alliances" or in any way limit American freedom of action where American principles and traditions are at stake.

The precise thought of the convention probably was put by Senator Hiram Johnson when he said that "the first assault of internationalism and international bankers on the Republican Party had been met and defeated."

This action by the Republicans makes it more than ever certain that the Presidential campaign is to be fought out on the League of Nations and Treaty of Peace issue. The field is left wide-open to the Democratic Party so far as President Wilson's work at Paris goes. It can declare for the League and the Treaty with or without reservations. The radical element in the Republican Party seems to have captured the Chicago convention and carried it farther along the line of repudiation than it intended or cared to go.

The Democrats favor the League and the Treaty but are divided on the question of the reservations. A large element of the Republican Party will vote with the Democrats if they declare for the League and Treaty with satisfactory reservations. And we are inclined to think that the Democrats will meet them half way. So that, on the whole, Democratic chances of victory have been improved by the radical stand of the Republicans.

A Filipino Protest

Editor, THE CHINA PRESS

Dear Sir.—Permit to inform you that the small Filipino community in this city rises in protest against the remarks of your sport reporter, who delighted in commenting upon the ridiculous game played by what he generally termed the Filipinos, in your sport section last Sunday, and against the captain who hauled those players into the race course just for ridicule.

First, it must be mentioned that those Filipinos are sailors who went out on strike leaving their ship in Hankow and came to this city. They have never played baseball while the Shanghai team has grown gray playing the game in this city. To let the two play would be just as well as to let a bull pup and a Pekingese play, for which the latter would have no just reason to rejoice. We consider it therefore a shame for the Shanghai team to take the advantage. In Manila, the man who mustered these people will surely receive a good beating.

Second, your reporter ought to have sense enough to know that those Filipinos whom he delighted to call "smothered" are not players. Yet he rejoiced in saying that "the annihilation of the little brown men was complete." Any news reporter should know that in Manila no American team has yet proved to be a match for any local baseball team of these little brown men. In Manila, the little brown men always give lessons to the "big white men" in baseball. The Filipinos who played in Shanghai last summer were just amateurs and yet they succeeded in playing a fine series of games here, which shows that the Shanghai teams are awfully rotten.

Hoping that you will publish this protest to prevent any unexpected friction, I am,

Very respectfully yours,
F. M. BENEDICTS.

Shanghai, June 15, 1920.

Hygiene Of The Mind

BY BRICE BELDEN, M. D.

The popularity and the extent in development of the various cults which practice mental healing act as a healthful challenge to the medical profession.

Aside from their spiritual significance, it is obvious that these cults supply to their devotees an element that increases their happiness and fortifies their resistance against the disease-producing factors which threaten their peace of mind.

It must be admitted that their existence is the result of medicine's former failure to recognise human unity, that is to say, the reciprocal relations of physical and mental functions.

One does not have to go into the realm of the metaphysical in order to realise that man is more than a mere system of anatomical parts.

There are very real relationships between the ills of the flesh and of the mind. Certain psychic distortions produce effects in the physical body as though an erratic electric current were running through it, short-circuiting comfort and efficiency.

The horizon of medicine has broadened in part as a response to the challenge of the systems of mental healing. The psychology of patients as well as their physical traits and ailments receives careful consideration, and treatment is frequently founded upon psychic grounds.

A new point of view regarding sick human beings is nowadays taken by the medical profession. Health and hygiene are being applied in terms which take into account the physical, mental and moral development of human beings who are entitled to the amplest opportunity for the highest achievements in life.

Such work should receive its greatest impetus during childhood. Begun during this wonderful era, mental and physical hygiene promises new rewards and benefits for the race. Children must be individualised in the physical, psychological, educational and social phases.

Shoe-Tops With Wings!

(New York Sun Herald)

Paris, it is said, has decreed wings and feathers for women's shoe tops. If so, the relative chances of success in the United States of that style, and of the new native-born fancy for overalls and calico may be weighed by those of prophetic turn. David Belasco says that Paris is still the world's fashion center.

The Mystic Personality Of Lord Kitchener

"Kitchener was resting and reading in his cabin; he was summoned thence by the captain, and was seen standing on deck looking outwards, Fitzgerald faithful at his side. Nothing is known of what then happened to him—little indeed comes within just surmise. One thing is certain, that the brave eyes which had faced so many difficult and dangerous passages in life looked steadily into the face of Death."

—KITCHENER'S LAST MOMENTS.

* * *

"Kitchener destroyed much of his private correspondence when he was on the way to India to take up the appointment of Commander-in-Chief. Sir George Arthur says: 'He employed himself usefully on the voyage in studying Hindustani and—from the biographer's point of view—lamentably in strewing the Red Sea with the accumulated private correspondence of a quarter of a century.'"

* * *

"For a parallel one must perhaps go behind all history to the mythical heroic age—to the realm of saga and of legend. The mystery that in death wrapt round the blameless soldier, and the persistent disbelief in that death, belong to the same order as the passing of Arthur."

—SIR GEORGE ARTHUR.

* * *

The Life of Lord Kitchener, written by his private secretary, Sir George Arthur, has just been published, and has had a very good Press. It is in three volumes, of which the last alone deals with the story of the war. (Macmillan, £2 12s. 6d.)

To many people this life by one who knew him well will give an unexpected revelation of the man who has been called "The greatest figure of the war."

TO UNDERSTAND HIM

"'The burden which a great man lays upon his generation is the effort to understand him,'" says the Telegraph. "The phrase, which was originally used of a thinker, is equally applicable to the man of action, if at least he possesses the individuality of Lord Kitchener."

"When all is said and done, and after due consideration has been given to the rigor of those stupendous times, we think it not improbable that Kitchener will loom large to historians, and will be accounted the greatest figure in the war," writes Lt.-Col. Repington in the Morning Post.

"The moral effect produced by his acceptance of office must ever remain indisputable. In really essential matters, and whether in organisation or in strategy, he took the big line and the right road. Our troubles, our dangers, and our defeats can all be traced to divergence from the same principles upon which he endeavored to conduct the war."

NO PARTICULAR ADVANTAGES

"Sir George Arthur reviews the history of Kitchener's life with a fullness of detail and an abundance of sympathy only possible to a man who as secretary had lived with him in the closest intimacy," says the Telegraph. "Many of these details are fairly familiar to the present generation, and they afford one more convincing proof that in Great Britain, and under existing conditions, a great career is open for any man who has the commanding talents to achieve his ambition.

"Kitchener himself had no particular advantages. He had at the outset to fight his way with the rest, and to accept the difficulties incumbent on such a life as he had marked out for himself. But however much we may seek to know the precise means by which a great man wins his way, the essential quality of greatness usually escapes our analysis. In Kitchener's case, his personality always made a lasting impression on those with whom he had to deal, and it is perhaps not fanciful to assume that his large acquaintance with Egypt and the Arabs and the populations of the Near East gave him a touch of mysticism, a belief possibly in his own star, which marked him out amongst his fellows."

A GREAT GENTLEMAN

"What is the dominant impression that Sir George Arthur's Life of Kitchener leaves on one's mind? That he was, above everything, a great gentleman," says "A Wayfarer" in the Nation. "It is literally true that there is not a mean saying to be found in any one of his despatches or letters. The cause is obvious. Beneath Kitchener's rather saturnine personality and address there lay a great store of considerateness overflowing, in his South African career, into noble sympathy with an enemy's character and clear understanding of his case, and in almost all circumstances rich enough to temper a harsh political judgment."

"He was a man whose strength lay largely in his remoteness," says the Observer. "Mystery will doubtless continue to clothe him even when the future has revealed the impressions and estimates of the able men who were his colleagues. But though Lord Kitchener's contemporaries did not understand him, they had no hesitation in regarding him as great, and posterity seems certain to endorse this judgment. As the war begins to range itself in perspective, Lord Kitchener appears as its outstanding figure.

"Already, so fast is the movement of events nowadays, it borders on the incredible that Britain should have transformed herself into a nation in arms. But that transformation was achieved; its achievement won the war; and the man who planned it and carried it out as he had planned was Lord Kitchener."

HIS CLEANNESS OF MIND

Writing of Kitchener's remarkable purity of mind and of his reverential attitude towards women, the Marquis of Salisbury says:

"The moral fineness of Lord Kitchener's character showed itself in another side in a noteworthy cleanliness of mind. None will forget the words in his address in 1914 to the troops as they entered upon the great struggle, urging them to treat all women with perfect courtesy. This was a matter of no surprise to those who knew his attitude towards women—a chivalry of mind belonging to a bygone age which placed them on a pedestal. I recall, at a play in London, his resentment at some note of coarse disrespect where he considered there should only be reverence. I have been told that at Lord Kitchener's table, amongst his Staff nothing was ever said which might not have been said before a woman."

Kitchener was opposed to the use of asphyxiating gas. In a telegram to Sir John French (who had urged its adoption), congratulating the Canadians on their dauntless bravery when gas was first used by the Germans, he said: "The use of asphyxiating gases is, as you know, contrary to the rules and usages of war. Before, therefore, we fall to the level of the degraded German I must submit the matter to the Government."

HIS PRIVATE LIFE

"Kitchener's private, as his public life, offered some curious contrasts," writes his biographer. "Although he disliked social engagements, he still more disliked being entirely alone. The desire for someone near him had a very practical motive. Wholly self-reliant in great things, he was in the small circumstances of his domestic life curiously dependent on others. He would compute the figures for a vast organisation, but he would be loath to file a paper himself. He would sustain through a long day at highest pressure a discussion on some weighty matter, but would be very unwilling to open a Cabinet despatch-box or reply to a call on the telephone, and the key of an official box, if left in his custody, was liable to be found under the table. . . . Wit in others he appreciated keenly, but he had no joy in the thrust of a poisoned weapon or the double meaning of an unseemly jest. . . .

"The veiled indecencies of a light French opera he once attended in Egypt with a party of friends caused him acute discomfort. He was half puzzled, half dismayed, that any intelligent person should care to see such a piece; interest in it was as unintelligible to him as the indecencies themselves were intolerable. . . . Devotion to the Sovereign was a fixed point in his scheme of thought. . . . His life was based on religion in the primary sense of the word—the binding himself up with God. It seemed as if the conflict between good and evil had been fought and decided at some early stage of existence.

"It was said," concludes Sir George Arthur, "and with perfect truth, of Kitchener, that 'in life he knew no rest, and in death he found no grave.' And if, in any sense or degree, laborare est orare, may it not be thought of him that no life could present itself as a more proper prelude to the further life of full freedom and fair beauty, that no labor could claim more clearly:

"' . . . the rest
Inviolate, unvaried,
Divinest, calmest, best.'"

HIS TENDERNESS OF HEART

Beneath his hard exterior Kitchener concealed a natural tenderness of heart and strong emotional feelings, which, however, he kept under iron control. Sir George Arthur tells how he completely broke down at the service in memory of General Gordon, held a few days after the battle:

"Here at last Kitchener's pent-up feelings found expression; for when Father Brindle (late Bishop of Nottingham), the veteran and beloved chaplain who had accompanied the Gordon Relief Expedition, offered the prayer he had composed for the occasion, the tears welled up in Kitchener's eyes and coursed unrestrained down his cheeks. And when the simple ceremony was over, and his officers waited for the word to dismiss the parade, he was too overcome to speak, and merely signed to General Hunter to give the necessary word of command.

That Kitchener felt the strain of the campaign is evident from a letter he wrote to a friend, in which he said: "Ouf! it is all over, and I feel like a rag—but very, very thankful there was no hitch. The Queen offered me a peerage in such a nice manner—I think 'Khartoum of Aspall' will be the title I choose. 'Kitchener' is too horrible a name to put 'Lord' in front of."

KITCHENER'S DEATH

Despite all the efforts made to supply Russia with arms and ammuntion, things were going badly in that country, and early in May the Tsar caused it to be known that he was desirous that Lord Kitchener should pay a visit to Russia. Kitchener was by no means averse to the proposal. So the die was cast, and it was decided that he should embark at Scapa Flow for Archangel on Monday, June 5. He arrived at Scapa Flow about noon on the 5th, and lunched with Sir John Jellicoe (later Viscount Jellicoe). At 4:15 he left the flagship and proceeded on board the Hampshire, which was to convey him to Archangel.

"The wind at Scapa that day," says Sir George Arthur, "had been north-easterly, and the admiral, with intent to make the passage to the northward as easy as possible, directed that the Hampshire should proceed on what, with that wind, would be the leeside of the Orkneys and Shetlands. By an unhappy error of judgment an unswept channel was chosen for the passage of the cruiser, and Kitchener—the secret of whose journey had been betrayed—was to fall into the machinations of England's enemies and die swiftly at their hands.

"At five o'clock the Hampshire steamed from the Grand Fleet to her doom. She sped forward so fast and under such stress of weather that the destroyers who formed her titular escort turned about, leaving the vessel to her fate. When the crash came—the death-knell of all but some thirteen souls on board—Kitchener was resting, reading in his cabin. He was summoned thence by the captain, and was seen standing on the deck looking outwards, Fitzgerald faithful at his side.

"Nothing is known of what then happened to him—little, indeed, comes within just surmise. One thing is certain—that the brave eyes, which had faced so many difficult and dangerous passages in life, looked steadily in the face of death. One thing in God's good mercy is possible—that to those eyes, always strained to pierce the future, there was vouchsafed in the storm and in the darkness and in the death agony the vision of the eternal."

Here are some of the incidents of the Great Man as told by Sir George Arthur in this most readable Life:

FIRST MORNING IN OFFICE

"During Kitchener's first morning in Whitehall:

"His private secretary handed him a pen with which to give his signature for the official stamp. The pen declined to function. 'Dear me,' murmured Kitchener. 'What a War Office! Not a scrap of Army, and not a pen that will write!

"His impatience with War Office methods was of no recent growth. In a private letter during the South African war he wrote:

"'All our water bottles are so small as to be useless. It was exactly the same in the Sudan, when I had to fit out the whole of the British troops with water bottles which they had to pay for. . . . I am afraid I rather disgusted the old red-tape heads of departments. They are very polite, and present one with a volume of their printed regulations, generally dated about 1870, and intended for Aldershot manœuvers, and are quite hurt when I do not agree to follow their printed rot. . . .'"

HIS AMAZING FORESIGHT

Lord Kitchener's views on the general strategy of the war as revealed in this biography were just, and in some directions quite remarkably prescient. He not only foresaw that the war would be prolonged, and that, to win it, we must create armies on the Continental scale, but, from the very outset, acted on this belief.

"Kitchener saw the truth at a glance; he knew that the views of the politicians were wholly untenable and the provisions of the military authorities hopelessly insufficient. Whether our troops advanced, retired, or held their ground, it was not a question of reinforcing the miniature army appointed to take the field and of maintaining garrisons at home and in India, but of creating a real army which should pit itself in the near future fearlessly and effectively against the forces of the German Empire. He immediately laid his plans for an army of 70 divisions, coolly calculating that its maximum strength would be reached during the third year of the war, just when the enemy would be undergoing a sensible diminution of his resources in man-power.

"It is within just surmise that steady thinkers and efficient strategists may have shared intellectually his estimate of our commitments. But the one man bold enough to publish it was also the one man to make that estimate effective and to commend it to his countrymen with peculiarly persuasive force."

WOUNDED BY A FRIEND

The following is the passage in the book referring to the mission that came from Sir John French to London after Festubert:

"Embedded in the story of the supply of munitions is the unhappy occasion when from the battle of Festubert the Commander-in-Chief sent an extra aide-de-camp and a secretary to London, with the double design of effecting a minor coup d'etat and inflaming public opinion against the War Secretary, the man to whom he wrote, 'Thank God you are there, and I mean it.' The Commander's care for his soldiers, which constantly endeared him to them, and his mental chagrin and confusion when he saw success denied to their gallantry, must be his perpetual plea for a step which soldiers might otherwise find hard to condone.

"His embassy, whatever favor it found in Downing Street or Fleet Street, failed to shake by a hairbreadth the rock of public confidence on which Kitchener stood to, and beyond, his last hour. Messages and other testimonies of good will poured in to him from camps at home and overseas, and from every class and community and corner of England. A month later he received—on his way to and from the Guildhall—one of the greatest ovations of his life—and the Order of the Garter. He himself was always, and altogether, silent on the matter, but those who were close to him saw that he had been wounded, and, as he himself felt it, wounded in the House of a Friend."

A DEAL WITH MR. SCHWAB

Mr. Schwab, the head of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation, had offered a million rounds of gun ammunition in October, 1914. The offer was accepted, and Mr. Schwab came to England to see Lord Kitchener. Thus early the War Secretary saw the prolongation of the war. Addressing the great American steel magnate, he said:

"This war is not going to be a short one. I foresee five years of it at least, and I want you to pledge that the control of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation will not be sold by you or your associates under five years from now."

The agreement was made on the spot, and the vast capacity of the firm was secured for the Allies for the rest of the war.

When the Gallipoli expedition had to be abandoned and Kitchener was about to go out to arrange the withdrawal of the troops, he felt intensely his responsibility for the saving of life. Picturing the retirement, he told the Prime Minister:

"I pace my room at night and see the boats fired at and capsising, and the drowning men. Perhaps if I have to lose a lot of men over there, I may not want to come back."

"Lord Kitchener held that death on the field of battle could never be a matter for regret or lament, but he thought that capture spelt triumph for the captor and some indignity for the captured.

"A curious light is shed on his views about death in battle by a conversation he had with the Prince of Wales early in the Great War. His Royal Highness was very eager to go with his regiment to France. Urging Kitchener to let him go, he exclaimed:

"'What does it matter if I am shot; I have four brothers?'

"'If I were certain you would be shot, I do not know if I should be right to restrain you,' was Kitchener's reply. 'What I cannot allow is the chance—which exists until we have settled a line—of the enemy scoring you as a prisoner.'"

SOLDIERS EVERYWHERE

"The successful efforts of Kitchener to raise new armies amazed and confounded the Germans," says Sir George Arthur. "They deputed spies specially to ascertain the efforts made to raise troops. An intercepted report of one of these spies stated:

"(1) I have been to London, east and west, north and south; there is nothing to be seen but soldiers; (2) I have been in the provinces—there are soldiers everywhere; (3) I have even been to Wales, the home of pacifism, and there the very devils from hell (i.e., the miners) are coming up from below to join the Army."

A Preposterous World

What Would Pontius Pilate Say?

This is a preposterous world in many directions, says an Exchange. Here the Protestant churches are starting out to raise more than three hundred millions of dollars—and they will get it. Mr. Rockefeller says so, and he could give the whole amount himself if he wanted to.

The trustees of the Episcopalian Cathedral of St. John the Divine in New York announce they have arranged for the cutting and laying of four million dollars worth of granite to be used in the nave of the Cathedral.

This is all gratifying news, a wonderful contrast with the day when it was said: "Foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of Man hath nowhere to lay his head."

What would Pilate, calmly washing his hands of the unpleasant task that Rome put upon him have said, and thought, if some spirit had said to him "two thousand years from now, followers of the man whom you have just condemned will in one year raise three hundred million dollars to be spent in His name?"

When Fate Takes A Hand In A Love Game

BY FLORA BARRY

Dorothea sat up with a start as the page-boy walked swiftly by her.

"Mr. Townsend—Mr. Townsend, please!" he called loudly, and Dorothea found herself following him.

"What initials, please," she inquired, timidly standing in front of him.

"R. H., ma'am, Mr. Townsend," he replied, coolly.

"Have you found him?" she asked anxiously.

"I only just got the call, ma'am. He isn't in this room," resuming his course.

Many eyes followed the attractive young widow as she left the lounge with sudden determination. She was indeed lovely to look upon and the soft black veil fell in graceful folds around her youthful shoulders. There was an unmistakable wistfulness as if the possibility of a long search were over.

Each step seemed to open memory's floodgates a little wider and Time had made remembrance infinitely more beautiful to recall. There was nothing distasteful about those days of poverty, because Bob had always been there with his hopeful, unfailing enthusiasm and delicious sense of humor.

Then that unforgettable separation and the enforced marriage after two years of patient waiting to the man she scarcely knew. Money had not proved an adequate compensation after all, for it could not bring back the song in her heart.

"Here I am, boy," a tall man declared, rising to his feet just as Dorothea stood in the doorway. She did not hesitate a moment, but approached him with outstretched hands.

"At last I have found you," she said, looking into his startled eyes, "and this angel of faith is responsible." She laughed happily.

"A telegram, sir, the surprised youth began, extending a yellow envelope. "Any answer, sir?"

"Not at present," the man replied, without taking his eyes from Dorothea's radiant face, and fumbled in his vest for the expected tip. The boy disappeared, chuckling at the tall man's extravagance.

"You fairly make me dizzy," Bob began, looking intently at her, "how on earch did you happen to get here?" he continued, leading her over to a lounge, where they sat facing each other.

"I have been here nearly three months, Bob. Had to get away by myself—to think and plan for the future," the girl answered quietly. "You know I am alone now," she added in a low voice, "Please tell me about yourself. I have wondered so often about you and what these four long years have brought you."

"Mostly hard work," he answered seriously, "but I managed to dash in a little play now and then, so I can't act the martyr to please your woman's heart. I am happy and I think successful. "It wasn't pleasant down in that dead hole, but when the news came I decided to see it through.

RESPECT FOR THE DEAD

"Did you get my letter, the one written the day before I was married, telling you the truth?" Dorothea asked.

"It came too late; I didn't want to read it," he said with emotion.

"But why did you send me those flowers," the girl inquired.

"Out of respect to the dead principally—your wedding, my funeral. Surely you do not begrudge me that last token of a dead love. So dead it would not consider resurrection even," he said with a bitter note of sarcasm in his deep voice, and his eyes looking unflinchingly into hers. "Do you know I have dreamed of this day when we should meet again—to tell you this, and more than this, but I can't go on," he admitted.

"If your object was to make me unspeakably miserable, then you have succeeded admirably," Dorothea began, rising to her feet. "I am sorry I took this much of your valuable time, but it will make it easier to forget—a lot of things." She stopped suddenly and held out her hand. He rose and took her hand in a firm grip.

"Good-by, Bob"—were Dorothea's last words as she walked away.

His eyes followed her until she had disappeared, and he was suddenly conscious of a keen physical ache. His throat was hot and dry and his heart throbbed painfully. Why had he said those things to poor little Doffy? Perhaps she had suffered too in the past long wretched years. How lovely she was. He heard his name.

"Mr. Townsend, please," a voice commanded, and, looking up, he saw the page approaching. "Right here, boy," Bob called.

AN URGENT CALL

"The office wants an answer to that telegram, sir," the boy volunteered, standing in front of him.

Bob dug into his pocket and realised with a shock that he had entirely forgotten it.

"Just a moment and I will find out if it needs one." He turned to the boy—"You needn't wait."

Thoughtfully he reread the message:

"Can You Make Arrangements To Sail For S. A. On Monday? Wire Answer At Once.

V. H.

"Four days off, mighty short notice," Bob murmured to himself.

A few minutes later he wrote his reply:

"Glad To. Wire Particulars.

R. H. T.

"Pack everything, Minna. I expect to leave tomorrow afternoon," Dorothea announced to her maid.

"Nothing wrong, ma'am?" Minna inquired.

"Oh, No! just decided to go home," Dorothea replied reassuringly.

"Very good, ma'am," the maid said quietly, as she finished fastening the dinner gown.

Once out of the room, Dorothea made her way to the expansive porch overlooking the ocean. The soft lapping of the waves seemed to silence the constant agonising words that ran through her mind. Her cheeks were flushed and her eyes ached with unshed tears. "So dead it would not consider a resurrection even."

And he never read my letter," she kept murmuring to herself.

"Ah! here you are, my dear Mrs. Barlowe," a friendly voice floated over to her, and, turning, she faced one of her hotel acquaintances.

FATE TAKES HAND

"Good evening, Mrs. Hartly; a very peaceful setting, isn't it?" she replied, pointing to the silvery water.

"More romantic than peaceful, I should say," Mrs. Hartly said with a laugh. "But what I really wanted to see you about is this: We want you to dine with us this evening. I tried to get you in your room, but was told you already had left. So glad I found you here!"

"How delightful of you! I am particularly lonely this evening, and as I am leaving tomorrow I shall accept with pleasure," Dorothea exclaimed with enthusiasm.

"My husband arrived a few hours ago. Came on business, and I want you to meet him," Mrs. Hartly went on.

"He must be extremely nice to deserve you." Dorothea said gallantly. "What time do you dine?"

"At seven-thirty. It must be nearly that now," Mrs. Hartly replied, consulting her wrist watch. "Shall we go in and wait for the men?"

"It sounds like a real party," Dorothea said merrily, trying to brighten her own sombre mood.

"A business friend whom I have not met as yet," the woman returned pleasantly. "Thomas says he is charming, so am anxious to know him." Leading the way into the dining room she chose a table for four in the corner.

It was not long before Mrs. Hartly put in an appearance with his guest by his side.

AN ODD MEETING

"My dear, let me present Mr. Townsend. Sorry we are late," he apologised.

"How nice of you to come at all," Mrs. Hartly laughed up at them.

"Thomas, this is Mrs. Barlow—and Mr. Townsend—Mrs. Barlow," she added.

"We are very old friends, Mrs. Hartly," Dorothea announced serenely, smiling sweetly into Bob's eyes. She felt like shouting with joy.

"Childhood friends," Bob agreed meekly.

"How perfectly splendid!" Mrs. Hartly exclaimed. "It is always so much more comfortable when people know each other at a dinner."

Dorothea looked at Bob defiantly and devoted her whole attention to her jovial host. He found her very entertaining and did not conceal his admiration, urging her on in bantering discussions, much to the surprise of her "childhood friend."

Bob found himself wishing to be left alone with her, but failed to notice any response to his significant glances. She simply ignored him. The evening seemed endless beside his stout hostess and at ten o'clock he made some excuse and left them abruptly.

"A nice boy, but restless," Mrs. Hartly complained to her husband, "Was he always like that, Mrs. Barlow?" she asked anxiously.

"I really don't remember," the girl replied. "But Mexico is a dangerous country and is apt to make one nervous, I imagine."

"He is going to have a change of climate," Mr. Hartly announced. "He leaves for South America in a few days."

Dorothea's heart seemed to stop. A queer faintness overpowered her and she rose to conceal her emotion. Thanking them warmly for their kindness, she made a hasty departure.

A TELEPHONE CALL

Reaching her room, she fell on her knees. The moon sent a flood of light through the long windows, making a shadow of the slender little figure on the carpet.

The phone rang loudly by the bedside and caused a shock in the unbroken silence. Dorothea groped in the darkness and lifted the receiver from the hook. She could not speak and waited for the operator's usual question.

"Is that you, Dot?" a gentle masculine voice inquired.

"Yes, Bob," was all she could say.

"Doffy—I read your letter just now for the first time," he said, sheepishly. "I want to see you—right away. Shall I come up?" he asked softly.

"Yes—I guess so—" Dorothea replied, and hung up the receiver.

A timid knock told her that he had come and she went to meet him. It seemed so natural to be in his big arms again and to feel the warm pressure of his lips on hers that neither of them spoke.

"How did you know that I wanted to go to South America on my honeymoon?" Dorothea whispered in his ear.
